British Military Intelligence Maps by Geographical Section, General Staff (GSGS) of the War Office and Inter-Service Topographical Department

Geographical Section, General Staff (GSGS, also known as MI 4) operated under the Director of Military Operations and Intelligence. Its role was to supply maps to the British forces, collect data on foreign survey networks, provide training, and prepare survey data for British Expeditionary Force mobilization. GSGS was organized into small sections, each of which specialized in maps of a particular region. The War Office Map Library, which was also part of MI 4, acquired maps and cartographic intelligence data. Senior staff members were usually Royal Engineer officers with surveying qualifications, although there were a few Royal Artillery or infantry officers. The rest of the staff were civil technical assistants and clerks, together with some other Royal Engineer ranks.

The Inter-Services Topographical Department (ISTD) was formed following the nearly disastrous British invasion of Norway (April 9 - May 9, 1940). Prior to that time, the Army and Royal Navy had different intelligence units that were independent of each other. The ISTD was established at Manchester College, Oxford. Working together with members of each arm and the Allies, this unit was able to bring together zero-elevation aerial photography, which is photography taken as close to the wave tops as possible, in order to bring the views of the beach landscape, which were then made into continuous horizontal strip photographs. These files were marked with military targets such as bridges, marshalling yards and the like, and new photos and intelligence were used to update obsolete maps. From these new maps, and from older maps, magazine illustrations, and old family photographs taken on holiday collected from the public, new maps were produced for the planning staffs and operations forces.

The series contains 183 items organized alphabetically by country. Most maps are accompanied by supporting text. European and Asian theaters of operation are represented.

American Military Intelligence Maps by Army Map Service

The Army Map Service of the US Army Corps of Engineers was the premier map-making agency of the US Department of Defense, which prior to 1949, it was known as the Department of War. From 1941 to 1968, the major task of the Army Map Service was the compilation, publication, and distribution of military topographic maps and related products required by the Armed Forces of the United States.

Between 1941 and 1945, the Army Map Service prepared 40,000 maps of all types, covering 400,000 square miles of the earth's surface. More than 500 million copies were produced during the war. The North African Campaign alone required 1,000 different maps with a total of 10 million copies. The Normandy invasion required 3,000 different maps with a total of 70 million copies. Similar commitments were filled for the Pacific and Far East operations.

The series contains 11 items organized alphabetically by country. Most maps are accompanied by supporting text. The materials are a mixture of translated Russian and German documents, as well as a number of gazetteers for islands in the Pacific.

German Military Intelligence Maps from the Generalstab des Heeres, Abteilung fuer Kriegskarten und Vermessungswesen (IV. Mil-Geo).

The military geographic unit comprised Group IV of the Military Mapping and Survey agency of the German Army. Working from a large central office in Berlin and in satellite offices in occupied territories, mapmakers supported the work of military planners. The mapping units were tasked with producing handbooks and maps of occupied territories and areas where the Germans intended to invade. As the Germans adopted a defensive posture, handbooks, and maps were made of French and Italian coast regions, where the Germans anticipated they would have to repel Allied landings. The unit reached its peak output in 1943 with some 102 volumes that covered 39 areas. Some 240 specialty maps were produced, as well.

The series contains 88 items organized alphabetically by country. Most maps are accompanied by supporting text. The materials are in German. Maps of the Western European, African, and Russian fronts are represented.
