Scope and Content Note

The records of the MacDowell Colony span the period 1869-1970, with most of the material dated 1945-1968. The MacDowell Colony was founded as an arts colony in 1907 by Marian MacDowell who dedicated it as a memorial to her husband, American composer Edward MacDowell (1860-1908). The bulk of the records reflects the operational and administrative functions of the colony and its parent organization, the Edward MacDowell Association, and consists of correspondence, applications for admission, minutes of meetings, reports, legal and financial papers, and miscellany.

Although the Edward MacDowell Association was established to supervise and maintain the Colony, Marian MacDowell preferred to direct the colony herself and remained the principal administrator and fund-raiser for over forty years. Her correspondence is located in the Personal Correspondence series.

The correspondence of association members is arranged in the Correspondence subseries under Administrative Papers. The files include the directors' correspondence and memoranda exchanged between fellow directors and the general public and reflect the degree of personal influence and operational control exercised by the officers of the association over the colony. Until 1946 this control was more symbolic than real as Marian MacDowell managed all aspects of the colony's operation. The period from 1946 to 1956 was a time of transition as administrative responsibilities were passed from MacDowell to the association's board of directors, and a general director was appointed to supervise the daily operations of the colony itself. Association officers whose files are of particular importance include Marie Brodeur (general director), Aaron Copland (president), Parker and Louise Dutton Fillmore (general directors), Thomas Shaw Hale (treasurer), Lewis Montefiore Isaacs (treasurer), George M. Kendall (general director), James Johnson Sweeney (president), and Charles H. Studin (secretary). Correspondents include Hervey Allen, Alexander Calder, Padraic and Mary Colum, Max Frankel, Chaim Gross, DuBose Heyward, Marianne Craig Moore, Tillie Olsen, Louise Talma, Jean Starr Untermeyer, and Thornton Wilder.

The operations of the MacDowell Colony were directed through a series of committees, each chaired by an association director. The records of these committees are filed in the Committees subseries. The responsibility of selecting the colonists to be admitted for each colony session was delegated to special subcommittees under the aegis of the Admissions Committee which approved the final selections and sent out invitations to those chosen. The records of the Admissions Committee, in conjunction with the records in the Admission Applications subseries, provide a record of admission policies and selection procedures employed by the colony. The names of those selected to attend the colony include many of America's eminent writers, composers, and artists, and the admission applications, along with the admission committee's files and the colony's register and residents' book, supply a thorough listing of former colonists.

Marian MacDowell promoted funding for the colony during the early years of its existence through a series of piano recitals and personal appeals. The scope of funding activities and the attendant problems of accounting and financial management are detailed in the Financial Papers and Legal File subseries. Private donors named the colony as beneficiary in wills and testaments and granted continuing endowments through bequests. Material relevant to these bequests are listed in headings under the Legal File. Material documenting fund-raising activities, including the ambitious endowment drive of 1937, is located among the Financial Papers, as are accounting and financial reports. The latter material provides a breakdown of the colony's financial position, concentrating on the period after 1946 when the association assumed full fiscal responsibility. The Miscellany series contains booklets published for the Peterborough Pageants (1910-14), the colony's first major publicity event and fund-raising success.

Affiliations with music clubs and associations had always been important to the colony. Since 1919, when the National Federation of Music Clubs asked to hold its biennial meeting at Peterborough, the colony cultivated contacts with both local and national organizations, as well as unifying the network of MacDowell Clubs that exist throughout the country. The Office File Miscellany subseries includes headings pertaining to these club affiliations.

Also of interest is a group of letters written by Parker Fillmore to Hermann Hagedorn dated from 1936 to 1938 and arranged in the Miscellany series. These are unusually full and informative reminiscences about Edwin Arlington Robinson, longtime resident and friend of the colony. The letters were written to aid in a biography of Robinson that Hagedorn was working on at the time.

There are few items in the collection that relate to Edward MacDowell. The Miscellany series includes an appointment calendar, 1884, and some biographical notes. In addition to the Personal Correspondence series, Marian MacDowell is also represented in the Miscellany series which includes her speeches and writings.

Organization of the Papers

The collection is arranged in five series:
