Biographical Note

Larry Colwell was born in Detroit, Michigan, on December 28, 1901, to naturalized Canadian parents; his birthname was Lavern or Laverne according to census records.

His interest in photography began around 1938. From 1939 to 1941, Colwell studied photography in Los Angeles at both the Art Center School and the Choinard School of Art. At his photography studio in New York City, he got his start in advertising and fashion photography, with his photographs appearing in major national magazines such as Time, Life, Vogue, Aperture, and others. In the 1950s, through the support of Minor White at Aperture magazine, Colwell became distinguished for his figure studies.

His dance photography began with dancers of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo. In 1955, Colwell was given a one-artist exhibit of his dance photographs by the De Young Museum in San Francisco. Relocating to Monterey, California, in 1950, he was introduced to noteworthy photographers such as Ansel Adams, Wynn Bullock, Imogen Cunningham, and Ruth Bernhard. From 1964 to 1968, Colwell taught creative photography at the Jacksonville Art Museum, where Anthony Barboza (1944-) was among his students. He was an instructor of photography at the Silvermine College of Art in New Canaan, Connecticut, until 1971.

Larry Colwell died in New Canaan, Connecticut, in 1972.

Among the galleries and collections that have Colwell's work are the Center for Creative Photography in Tucson, Arizona; San Francisco Museum of Modern Art; New Orleans Museum of Art; the Hallmark Photographic Collection in Kansas City, Missouri; the Jewish Museum in New York City; the University of New Mexico Art Museum; the George Eastman House in Rochester, New York; New York Public Library; the Museum of Fine Arts in Houston, Texas; and the National Gallery of Canada, Ottawa, Ontario.

Subjects include some of the most famous ballet artists of the 1940s and 1950s, affiliated with the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo as well as George Balanchine and Lincoln Kirstein's Ballet Society (which became New York City Ballet). Other significant photographic subjects are Talley Beatty, John Cage, and Merce Cunningham. A small amount of professional papers are also included: a one-page biography, clippings and articles about Colwell and his oeuvre, Colwell's own writing on dance photography, and flyers related to exhibits of his work.

BOX 1-8

Series

Photographs, 1944-1956

This series contains black-and-white photo contact sheets, negatives, and photographs (some mounted) taken by Larry Colwell. Subjects include studio portraits of individual artists (headshots as well as costumed full body images), group shots in costume and in rehearsal. The collection includes two images of choreographer George Balanchine in rehearsal and a photograph of Alexandra Danilova watching a rehearsal. Ballets pictured include John Taras's The Minotaur (1947); Giselle (Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo production, undated); Raymonda (Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo production, 1946); The Snow Maiden (Nijinska, 1946 production); Balanchine's The Four Temperaments (1946); Scotch Symphony (Balanchine, 1952); Balanchine's Serenade (1934); Danses Concertantes (Balanchine, 1944); and Lew Christensen's 1947 failed ballet Blackface or Ruthanna Boris's 1951 Cakewalk. Most of the artists are drawn from ballet, but modern dance artists such as Talley Beatty, Valerie Bettis, and Merce Cunningham and composer John Cage are also among the subjects. Also included are a number of mounted photographs of Colwell's work.

Most of the contact sheets and negatives have a unique number assigned. The collection does not include corresponding negatives for the mounted photographs, many of which have markings that indicate they were part of an exhibit or commercial display.

Divided first by function (studio or publicity photos, rehearsal photos, art shots), then arranged alphabetically by name of dancer, company, or subject. When no date information is known, filmstrip numbers have been used to help substantiate an order. Unidentified and miscellaneous items are listed at the end of the series or subseries.
